Mr. M. F. Pogue left Friday on a business trip to Louisville. Mrs. Pogue accompanied him and will remain for sometime a guest of her daughter Mrs. Louis Wilkes.

Under these circumstances, we are at a loss to understand how anybody can say of Little Rock that she has "fallen down", and how can we understand how anyone can be surprised at the attitude of the county. If other counties of their number chose to give us authorization the use of names with which they are entrusted, contrary to the voice of their people, that is matter between their people and the officials of those counties. As for Crittenden, she accepted the new law in good faith, and is relying upon the pledge of the Commonwealth, as expressed in the law, that she will build and maintain the roads named without expense to the people of the county, and that work will progress from the centers of construction named in the act without preference or prejudice to either.

JEAN'S TEA ROOM

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

It was by Mrs. W. H. Harkness, Graduate, Jean Webb learned against the gale and looked up at the quiet old house where she had been born, and which was the birthplace of her mother and her grandmother. The three of them lived alone there with a tiny income from Jean's school teaching, with the old house almost falling down for need of repairs, and with a tangled old garden which had no one to take care of it.

Grandmother was old and feeble and Mrs. Webb was not strong. When Jean came home from teaching her sturdy youngsters she was tired and there was always housework to do, so the old house and garden were neglected.

"If I could only sell it," sighed Jean, "for a good sum of money, then, she might and brushed away a tear, "then mother and grandmother would die of heart disease! Well, we'll keep it—each one, all together!"

She turned as a motorcar slowed at the gate. A smartly uniformed chauffeur touched his cap and opened the door of the car.

An elderly woman with gray hair and soft appealing eyes smiled graciously at the slender girl at the gate. "I beg your pardon—can you tell me if there is a tea room nearby?" she asked. "We have had a breakdown and it is long past tea time."

Jean hesitated. With the woman's question an idea flashed into her head. Perhaps this was the answer to her prayers—this might be the golden opportunity knocking at her gate. If there was a demand for tea rooms—why not supply it?

In a few moments three ladies were sitting in the comfortable chairs in the green glass of the homelike vine, overlooking over the roses that Jean brought from the pure chaffers of the frequent day lilies. Then Jean disappeared for a period to return with pink slices of ham laid on crisp lettuce leaves, delicious balls of cream cheese, a pot of homemade jam, a simple salad and dainty bread and butter sandwiches, these and a pot of tea Jean placed before the ladies and then went away and left them alone.

When she came back they were so generous in their praise of the unexpected hospitality—so eager for Jean to open a tea room there.

"You are so near the post road, my dear—all you need is a few tables on the veranda and your own beautiful things—your cooking is delicious—let me have a sign painted for you!" urged Mrs. Debridge, the owner of the car and the hostess of the party.

"You are too kind," protested Jean. "I could send my son out next week and I may come with him—it is vacation now and you will have plenty of time. However, we shall send all our friends."

They laughingly drove away, their arms full of flowers, and it was not until they had disappeared that Jean remembered that they had not asked for a check and she had not thought to charge them.

"A poor business woman am I!" she murmured wryly as she cleared the table. Then she found a five-dollar bill pinned to the damask cloth and she dashed into the house waving it excitedly.

"But Jean the schoolmarm and sister Jean the keeper of the tea shop—no wonder of her garden once more flourish!"

A week later a small gray car stopped at the gate and Jean, who was enthusiastically wedding the grateful walk between the rows of fragrant flowers, thought of her grubby baggy and mussed blue frock. "It must be Mrs. Debridge's son," she thought as she went to the gate. In one hand he carried two rustic swinging signs and with the other he uncovered his handsome head.

"Is this the Wayside tea room?" he asked with twinkling eyes.

"Why—no," hesitated Jean.

"I am afraid it is—or it is going to be!" He grinned as he displayed the signs.

More enough—framed in rustic were the magic words "THE WAYSIDE TEA ROOM" and one corner of the sign was lengthened into a pointing finger.

"How kind of Mrs. Debridge," cried Jean enthusiastically.

"This is for your veranda and the other to hang from some tree down the road—a guide. Mother said you would know the tree."

"The old locust at the corner," explained Jean.

"I will hang it for you," declared Phil Debridge, and from the tool kit in the car he brought the necessary tools, and presently the quaint sign was hanging in the soft wind. Afterward Phil hung the other sign over the front where Mrs. Webb and Jean prepared a high tea in the veranda. There was fresh strawberry shortcake and plenty of cream and other delicious viands, for the Webbs were famous housewives.

Phil lingered on the front steps with Jean. A whippoorwill was singing in the orchard and the roses were heavy with fragrance.

"I shall come again—and again!" promised Phil, releasing Jean's fluttering fingers.

"Do come," said Jean in a small voice; and her tone might have discouraged Phil Debridge had he not read her eyes. He felt that while Jean's tea room might be the beginning of the story, the ending of the story must come only when beautiful Jean belonged to him.

REVIVAL AT CATHOON

Rev. Robert Leat has just closed a three weeks revival at Cathoon, which some of the people say was the greatest revival in the history of the town. Many say that for years there has been no revival here, any way that pleased the people. The results are 140 conversions and 1000 baptisms. The revival was held at the school building, which was open after and accepted Christ as their Savior. Most of the conversions were among the young people. Fifty-three names were given for membership.

The singing was as good as the best, the choir with about 40 voices accompanied with pipe organ, piano and orchestra. The crowd was large from the beginning and the spirit of the meeting was good all the way through. When the adjournment and Sunday school were packed, as they were a number of times during the meeting, there was present a sweet and pleasant spirit. The last Sunday night was the greatest of all, God was powerfully felt.

MRS. MARY E. BUTLER

Mrs. Mary E. Butler, wife of T. Butler, was born Oct. 19, 1861, in Walker, Hamilton County, Ind., Jan. 28, 1891, she has been in failing health for some time. Everything that a faithful husband and loving friends could do was done. She was the mother of four children, three living and one dead. She leaves to mourn her husband, three children, a mother, seven brothers and a host of nieces and friends. The funeral was conducted at the residence in the presence of a large congregation. The interment in the new cemetery, conducted by Rev. W. T. Oakley.

AS a dairy farmer you can figure out to the penny what your cream is worth. You know that every pound of butter fat has a distinct value to you. You must all add to use a separator that makes any cream.

The Primrose Cream Separator gets every drop of cream. The principle on which it operates is as simple as the mechanism. The frame is open and sanitary—the supply can be large and low. Every beating and quiet gear is well oiled by a splash system.

In Primrose separators, good workmanship and materials, close skimming and durable qualities are the distinguishing points.

No matter what the size of your herd the Primrose is a money-maker. Two or three sow fatteners use them with profit.

The Primrose is the only engine separator that automatically drains out the used oil from the sump case when new oil is added.

Let us demonstrate this and other points. If it is not convenient for you to call, please us and we will bring a machine out and show you how it operates and what its financial advantages are to you.

Great Man's Vanity
Julius Caesar was sensitive regarding his baldness. So much did this worry him that he became ill. When the day came on which Caesar discovered that there was no remedy he had a crown made that covered the entire top and back of his head, but it was a torture to wear it.
